

— Scott Douglas - Guitar / Vocals —

Scott Douglas started playing guitar at 11, when he snuck his father's guitar out of the closet. The strings were so high that it made his fingers bleed, but he kept at it until he learned how to play. His influences were “any music that didn't sound like it was written just to make money.”

After an assortment of garage bands, he began playing professionally at age 20. He has played all over the Southwest, performing his own music and playing on stage in concerts with icons like Chuck Berry. As a member of The Artists band, he played his songs on several live radio broadcasts, along with band-mate James Watson.

Sons of Thunder is the combination of what he calls “the best musicians I have played with. It makes it a joy to be up on stage.”
